Including Copyright Material* in a Thesis to be submitted to eSpace

[*Copyright material here refers to material where the copyright is owned by a third party – i.e., someone other than the Higher Degree student or Curtin University]

When you include copyright material in your Higher Degree by Research (HDR) thesis and then submit it to eSpace, you are MAKING A COPY of the material and then COMMUNICATING it online to an audience outside Curtin. These are rights that are normally reserved by the copyright owner. Therefore you should bear the following points in mind when writing and submitting your HDR thesis:

Short quotations
It’s fine to include brief quotations or one of two images (including graphs, diagrams, illustrations, etc.) from another publication, provided that you acknowledge the source.

Copyright lapsed
It’s OK to include any material where copyright has expired (normally life of author/creator plus 70 years).
No limits on amount that can be copied.

“Curtin-owned” material
It’s OK to include any material in which Curtin owns the copyright (except Confidential papers, etc.).
No limits on amount that can be copied. It is courteous to acknowledge the source.

Journal articles, conference papers, etc.
If your thesis is going to include text taken from a journal article or conference paper that you have written in the course of your research, you will need to make sure that you have retained the copyright in the work. Sometimes, for example, it is a requirement that you assign the copyright in the work. Sometimes, for example, it is a requirement that you assign the copyright to the journal publisher or conference organisers as a condition of acceptance. If this is the case then you will need to get permission from the publisher or conference organiser to re-use your own material.

If you’ve written a journal article or research paper jointly with someone else (such as your supervisor), you may need to get their approval also to reproduce all or part of the text in your HDR thesis. This would be the case if your fellow author is a joint holder of the copyright.
Copying from Internet
If you want to include material obtained from a website, check the Terms of Use or any licence agreement posted on the site to make sure you are allowed to copy the material and communicate it online to a worldwide audience.

Many sites will allow users to copy limited amount of material for non-commercial, educational purposes provided that the source is duly acknowledged. However, it is not always stated explicitly that he material can then be communicated online. Where no explicit or implied permission is granted in the Terms of Use, you will need to obtain written permission from the organisation controlling the website.

In the case of material made available on an Open Access site (e.g., under a Creative Commons licence) make sure you comply with any conditions attached to the licence – such as a requirement to fully acknowledge the source.

Electronic resources
If you want to include material obtained from an electronic resource (e.g., e-journal, e-book, database) check the terms and conditions of the contract or licence agreement under which the item was obtained. Sometimes these conditions are displayed on the product itself. Make sure you abide by any conditions imposed.

It is unlikely in the case of commercial products that you will be permitted as a matter of course to copy the material and communicate it online via espace. Usually you will need to obtain written permission from the publisher. Sometimes these organisations may impose a charge for the use of the material.

Work not made available to public
You don’t have any right to reproduce or communicate unpublished material or material that has not been made available to the public. This might include, for example, private letters, manuscripts, company reports and documents, questionnaires, etc. if you want to include such material in your thesis you’ll need to get written permission from the owner.

Note that this requirement may still apply in situations where you are doing your research work in association with, or with the support of, another organisation or company. It’s likely that you’ll still need to get their permission to use internal company documents, reports, etc. for inclusion in your thesis.

Student work
Under Curtin’s “Intellectual Property – Ownership and Commercialisation Policy and Procedures” students normally own the copyright in assignments, projects, etc. that they submit for assessment as part of their course. Thus if you want to include extracts from another student’s work you’ll need to get their permission in writing.
Copying with permission
You can include any material in your thesis if you have obtained permission from the copyright owner to do so. Seeking permission is essential in the circumstances described above – e.g., if you are not sure if you are allowed to copy and communicate specific material, or if the stated conditions (on a website, for instance) are too restrictive.

Make sure you get permission in writing (an email is usually acceptable), and keep a copy of the correspondence received in case any questions are raised later.

Be sure to comply with any conditions imposed, and acknowledge the source from which the material was obtained.

In your thesis refer to the fact that permission has been granted to use the material in question.

When you approach a copyright owner to seek permission to use copyright material, specify what material you want to use, where it is located, and what purpose you want to use it for. Stress that it is for non-commercial purposes only, and state that it will be included online in espaces. The University’s Copyright website includes a sample letter that you can use or adapt to seek formal permission to use copyright material.

Acknowledging your sources
Always be sure to provide a full citation for any copyright material that you include in your thesis. In the case of Internet material cite the relevant URL.

Such acknowledgement is not only standard academic practice but is also a requirement under the “moral rights” provisions of the Copyright Act 1968.

Useful links
Permissions Letter:
http://copyright.curtin.edu.au/docs/HDR_Students_Permission_Request.docx

Copyright for Higher Degree Thesis Students:
http://copyright.curtin.edu.au/research/higher-degree-theses.cfm

NEED MORE INFORMATION?
Contact the Copyright Team:
- library-copyright@curtin.edu.au
- Tel. 9266-7494 (Amanda Bellenger, Manager – Strategy, Planning & Copyright)

Updated May 2016
Prepared by Bruce Ridley, Sept 2006